I. INTRODUCTION

Defendant FCA US LLC moves to transfer this case to the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, for referral to the Bankruptcy Court in that District. FCA US contends that transfer is warranted because the claims pleaded by Plaintiffs require an interpretation of a Sale Order entered by the Bankruptcy Court, and that Court expressly retained jurisdiction to interpret and enforce its own Sale Order. Plaintiffs oppose transfer based primarily on their interpretation of what the Sale Order says.<sup>1</sup> The question here is which court – this one or the Bankruptcy Court – should interpret the Sale Order and determine whether its bar applies to the claims herein. Plaintiffs’ self-serving interpretation declaring the Sale Order does not apply ignores the fact that some court, and not the parties to this dispute, must interpret the Sale Order and decide which of two proffered interpretations of it prevails.

It is revealing, however, that Plaintiffs feel their proffered interpretation of the Sale Order is necessary just to support their arguments that transfer is not warranted. This makes clear that the threshold issue here is one which requires an interpretation and application of the Sale Order. And, as noted in FCA US’s opening Memorandum, courts routinely transfer such cases to the Bankruptcy Court to allow it to interpret its own Order. FCA US’s motion should be granted.

II. FACTS RELEVANT TO TRANSFER MOTION

The essential facts regarding application of the Sale Order are not in dispute: FCA US did not manufacture or sell Plaintiffs’ vehicles; FCA US cannot be held liable for any defects that existed in Plaintiffs’ vehicles at the time of manufacture; and, absent its express assumption of recall obligations in the Sale Order, FCA US had no duty to provide any remedy for Plaintiffs’ vehicles.

<sup>1</sup>See Plaintiffs’ Opposition to Defendant FCA US LLC’s Motion to Transfer; Memorandum of Points and Authorities in Support, Docket No. 30 (“Pl. Opp.”).

1 The currently operative First Amended Complaint (“FAC”), as well as 2 Plaintiffs’ Opposition to the current transfer motion, make it clear that Plaintiffs’
3 claims implicate a defect that existed at the time of manufacture. In the FAC, 4 Plaintiffs allege that there is a hardware defect in an original equipment part which 5 needs to be replaced, and FCA US failed to replace that part. See FAC, ¶¶21, 25, 6 99, 158. And, in their Opposition, Plaintiffs argue that FCA US acted wrongfully 7 because, instead of replacing this purportedly defective original equipment part 8 under a recall, it performed only a software repair on their vehicles in an effort to 9 save money. See Pl. Opp., pp. 1-2, 4.<sup>2</sup>

10 III. ARGUMENT

11 A. The Bankruptcy Court Has Jurisdiction.

12 Plaintiffs argue that the Bankruptcy Court lacks jurisdiction to interpret its 13 own Sale Order because this is a non-core proceeding. See Pl. Opp., pp. 11-12.
14 But, the United States Supreme Court has unequivocally held that a “Bankruptcy 15 Court plainly ha[s] jurisdiction to interpret and enforce its own prior orders.” 16 Travelers Indem. Co. v. Bailey, 557 U.S. 137, 151 (2009). And, a transfer would 17 be solely for the purpose of having the Bankruptcy Court interpret the Sale Order 18 and its effect on the claims pleaded herein. Thus, Plaintiffs’ arguments regarding a 19 lack of jurisdiction are clearly wrong.

20 Furthermore, the case Plaintiffs cite for their argument that the Bankruptcy 21 Court would lack jurisdiction unless this case can be categorized as a “core” 22 proceeding – Stern v. Marshall, 131 S.Ct. 2594 (2011) – actually holds that 23 bankruptcy courts have jurisdiction over both “core” and “non-core” proceedings.
24 Id. at 2607. As the Stern Court noted, the relevance of the distinction between 25 “core” and “non-core” proceedings is not jurisdictional; rather, it impacts only

26 <sup>2</sup>The heart and soul of Plaintiffs’ claims is that FCA US provided a software 27 upgrade instead of replacing an allegedly defective piece of hardware in their 28 vehicles, yet they now argue that they do not even know if this part is really defective. See Pl. Opp., p. 3.

1 whether the bankruptcy court enters final judgment, or instead submits its proposed 2 findings of fact and conclusions of law to the district court. Id.

3       Regardless, under Ninth Circuit law, this case is, in fact, a “core” proceeding 4 because it requires an interpretation of a bankruptcy court sale order. See, e.g., In 5 re Karykeion, Inc., 2013 WL 1890626, *3 (9th Cir. Bank.Pan. 2013) (“As this 6 adversary proceeding turned on the interpretation of agreements approved by and 7 incorporated into a section 363 sale order, it was a core matter”); see also Tribul
8 Merch. Servs., LLC v. Comvest Grp., 2012 WL 5879523, *11 (E.D.N.Y. 2012) 9 (holding that bankruptcy court has “core jurisdiction to interpret and enforce its 10 own sale order” to determine if claims are barred where sale order “arguably 11 intended to absolve the purchaser from bearing certain liabilities relating to the 12 vehicles going forward” (citation omitted)); In re Motors Liquidation Co., 428 B.R.
13 43, 57 (S.D.N.Y. 2010) (“[C]ourts have characterized the injunctive authority of 14 bankruptcy courts as ‘core’ when the rights sought to be enforced by injunction are 15 based on provisions of the Bankruptcy Code, such as the ‘free and clear’ authority 16 of § 363(f). ... The injunctive provisions in the Sale Order enjoining successor 17 liability would thus be within the Bankruptcy Court’s core jurisdiction to authorize 18 and effectuate the 363 Transaction ‘free and clear’ of Appellants’ claims under 19 § 363(f)” (internal citations omitted)).

20       Plaintiffs cite three cases in support of their position that this is a “non-core” 21 proceeding. See Opp., p. 11 (citing In re Kold Kist Brands, Inc., 158 B.R. 175
22 (C.D.Cal. 1993); In re Harris Pine Mills, 44 F.3d 1431 (9th Cir. 1995); In re
23 Goodman, 991 F.2d 613 (9th Cir. 1993)). These cases, however, speak only 24 generally to the definition of “core” versus “non-core” proceedings. Not a single 25 one touches on the need for an interpretation or enforcement of a bankruptcy court 26 sale order, and they thus do not support Plaintiffs’ position that this is a “non-core” 27 proceeding.
28

B. Plaintiffs’ Mischaracterize Their Claims And Misstate The Sale Order.

The core of Plaintiffs’ arguments against transfer is that because their claims arise from a recall administered by FCA US, and not from a manufacturing defect created by Old Carco, they have nothing to do with the Sale Order. But, FCA US does not seek transfer solely because Plaintiffs’ claims implicate a manufacturing defect (which they do) and thus are barred by the Sale Order. FCA US also seeks transfer because the wrongful conduct alleged by Plaintiffs falls squarely within the Sale Order provision governing FCA US’s assumption of Old Carco’s recall obligations, and that provision has limitations which, FCA US contends, preclude the claims Plaintiffs plead here. Transfer will allow the Bankruptcy Court to interpret its own Sale Order as to whether those limitations do bar Plaintiffs’ claims. Plaintiffs’ self-serving, unilateral declaration that the limitation does not mean what FCA US contends it means (Pl. Opp., p. 8), only highlights the need to transfer because it makes clear that the parties have a genuine dispute over what a provision in the Sale Order means.

Plaintiffs’ argue that the Sale Order provision limiting FCA US’s liabilities with respect to its recall actions cannot possibly limit FCA US liabilities for civil claims that purportedly arise out of the actions it takes as part of its assumed duty to carry out Old Carco’s recall obligations. Pl. Opp., p. 8. Plaintiffs reason that such a limitation would allow FCA US to “implement the most reckless, inexpensive recalls imaginable ... yet to be exempt.” Id. But, this is nonsensical when one considers that recalls are conducted under the watchful eye of the NHTSA which has the authority to, and has exercised its authority to, levy heavy civil fines in the hundreds of millions of dollars against vehicle manufacturers who fail to properly provide recall remedies. Plaintiffs’ argument ignores this fact that was, undoubtedly, understood by the Bankruptcy Court, i.e., that the NHTSA has jurisdiction to ensure that proper recall remedies are administered. In light of the NHTSA’s well established legal authority in the area of motor vehicle recalls, it is

1 likely that the Bankruptcy Court knew that the NHTSA would assure recalls were 2 conducted properly, and thus concluded that it was a fair tradeoff to exempt
3 FCA US from civil liabilities arising out of its assumption of Old Carco's recall 4 obligations in exchange for FCA US agreeing to bear the responsibilities and costs 5 of conducting necessary recalls that would have never been implemented without 6 such an agreement (the NHTSA otherwise would not have been able to hold 7 FCA US accountable since its authority extends only to those who 8 manufactured/supplied allegedly defective vehicles and their components).

9 In any event, Plaintiffs' claims, at their core, are about a manufacturing 10 defect. Plaintiffs charge FCA US with wrongful, and immoral and unethical, 11 conduct for choosing to implement a software fix in an effort to save money when 12 it should have replaced an allegedly defective original equipment part. See FAC, 13 ¶¶21, 25, 99, 158; Pl. Opp., pp. 1-2, 4. It is the FAC, as pleaded, which determines 14 whether the Sale Order is implicated and thus whether transfer is warranted; it is 15 not Plaintiffs' after-the-fact characterizations. See Pickern v. Pier 1 Imports (U.S.), 16 Inc., 457 F.3d 963, 968-69 (9th Cir. 2006) (affirming district court's refusal to 17 consider plaintiff's characterization of the complaint to survive summary 18 judgment). Yet, Plaintiffs are trying to avoid transfer by re-creating the FAC.

19 Plaintiffs now contend that "[a]ny allegations of defect in the FDCMs are 20 based entirely on [FCA US's] representation that said units are defective." Pl.
21 Opp., p. 3. But, in the FAC Plaintiffs allege that: they "purchased a vehicle 22 manufactured by Defendant FCA US, LLC or its predecessors or successors in 23 interest" (FAC, ¶ 1); their "claims all derive from a single course of conduct by 24 FCA US, its agents, predecessors, and subsidiaries" (id. ¶ 39); and that FCA US "is 25 in the exclusive position to offer and design recalls for the subject WK Model 26 Vehicles, by virtue of the fact that it, or its successors or predecessors in interest, 27 produced said vehicles" (id. ¶ 140 (emphasis added)). In other words, in the FAC 28 Plaintiffs allege that the same party manufactured their vehicles (which, the parties

1 agree, is Old Carco, not FCA US), and then engaged in a single course of conduct
2 giving rise to liability.<sup>3</sup> These allegations compel transfer to the Bankruptcy Court
3 because they raise issues at the heart of the Sale Order, e.g., issues of successor
4 liability and the responsibility for manufacturing defects.<sup>4</sup>

5 C. The Interest of Justice Favors Transfer.

6 Plaintiffs do not deny that 28 U.S.C. § 1412 establishes the relevant standard 7 here. Nor do they deny that this Court has broad discretion to transfer under 8 § 1412 “in the interest of justice.” And, Plaintiffs agree that the “in the interest of 9 justice” factors involve: (1) the efficient administration of the bankruptcy estate; 10 (2) the presumption in favor of the forum where the bankruptcy case is pending; 11 (3) judicial efficiency; (4) the parties’ ability to receive a fair trial; (5) the state’s 12 interest in deciding local controversies; (6) the enforceability of any judgment; and 13 (7) the plaintiff’s choice of forum. See Pl. Opp., p. 15.

14 Yet, Plaintiffs engage in misdirection by arguing about the convenience of 15 the parties. Id. at pp. 13-14. The “interest of justice” and the “convenience of the 16 parties” are separate and independent grounds for transfer under § 1412. Thus, the 17 “convenience of the parties” is irrelevant here. Even if it were relevant, it would 18 not defeat transfer because FCA US seeks transfer only for the limited purpose of a 19 one-time legal interpretation of the Sale Order. Hence, the proceedings in the 20 transferee court will not inconvenience anyone since those proceedings will not 21 involve witnesses or evidence. There will be no need for Plaintiffs to personally 22 appear at the hearing on this purely legal issue, and their counsel of record can

24
25 <sup>3</sup>Plaintiffs (incorrectly) refer to Old Carco as FCA US’s “predecessor” no less than twenty times in its Opposition. Opp., pp. 1, 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 15.

26 <sup>4</sup>Plaintiffs dismissed their implied warranty and strict liability claims in an 27 admitted effort to avoid transfer. See Pl. Opp., p. 7. But, the crux of Plaintiffs’ 28 still-pending negligent misrepresentation claim is the same as those claims, i.e., that FCA US represented it would repair Old Carco’s manufacturing defect, but it did not repair Old Carco’s manufacturing defect. See FAC, ¶ 139.

1 appear in the matter pro hac vice. Thus, Plaintiffs’ arguments about travel and 2 representation are simply red herrings.

3 Moreover, Plaintiffs offer no legitimate opposition to the factors that actually 4 do govern here:

- 5 ➤ First, even if Plaintiffs do not seek redress against the bankrupt 6 Old Carco, this case could implicate estate administration because 7 the claims they plead raise the potential for FCA US to claim 8 indemnification from the bankruptcy estate;
- 9 ➤ Second, despite Plaintiffs’ arguments to the contrary, the 10 presumption in favor of the Bankruptcy Court applies regardless of 11 who the defendant is in this proceeding because it is possible this 12 proceeding could effect – directly or indirectly – the bankrupt 13 estate;
- 14 ➤ Third, rather than “waste” judicial resources as Plaintiffs suggest, 15 transfer would promote efficiency since the Bankruptcy Court is 16 thoroughly familiar with the Sale Order, and thus is in the best 17 position to apply it consistently with the least effort; and
- 18 ➤ Fourth, Plaintiffs’ arguments about “jurisdiction to conduct a trial 19 in this matter,” and the enforcement of any ultimate judgment 20 entered against FCA US, are frivolous. Any claims that the 21 Bankruptcy Court finds to be viable despite the limitations set forth 22 in the Sale Order will go to trial here.

23 IV. CONCLUSION

24 For the reasons outlined herein and in FCA US’s Motion to Transfer and 25 Supporting Memorandum, Defendant FCA US LLC respectfully requests that this 26 Court transfer this case to the United States District Court for the Southern District 27 of New York, for referral to the Bankruptcy Court in that District.
